

Skills Development of Teachers

Are Teachers Leaders? Developing Leadership Skills in Teachers

Teaching is regarded as highly intellectual work, grounded in professional communities where teachers assume responsibility for the learning of their students and of one another. Teachers who formally or informally acquire leadership positions can help make change happen. Teachers, like students, need opportunities to engage actively in their own learning, rather than being told what to do. Teacher leaders inquire into their own practice and, in so doing, become articulate about learning, teaching, and modeling lifelong learning. The focus of the workshop will be on helping teachers to create an environment for learning that has influence throughout the school community and affects students and teachers alike.

Improving Questioning to Enhance Learning in the Classrooms

The ability to ask and respond to question is the heart of learning. It is observed that we have been focusing primarily on questions regarding the specific information which students possessed rather than questions to promote learning. Questions should play a central role in the learning process and because of this, we as teachers need to plan our questions carefully which will lead to appropriate assessment strategies. The focus of this workshop is to facilitate teachers/coordinators/ paper setters in developing strategies for teaching questioning skills to students.

Demands of 21st Century learning from School Leadership

If there is one factor that distinguishes successful 21st century schools it is strong leadership. Effective principals have the vision, courage, wisdom, and professional knowledge to lead learning communities that create opportunities for all children to achieve their highest potential. While individual teachers can adopt the practices of a 21st century classroom, the real impact on students is if an entire school and works toward the same vision. School leaders need to be skilled in knowing when this needs to happen, and have the courage to do so. The focus of the workshop will be on facilitating school leaders in meeting the demands of 21st century skills for learners and devising authentic plans for change in their own schools.
