OVERVIEW:

With the pandemic onset in 2020, teachers had to move their classes online hence compromising developing students' capabilities and necessary skills. Nonetheless, it was a must for teachers to provide a learning environment where students can interact with a minimum anxiety, frustration and fear so that they can cope with COVID 19.

Switching to synchronous and/ or asynchronous teaching entailed that the physical activities either went online or were partially performed which may have included a short video lecture, digital reading or podcast resulting in low students' engagement.

COURSE CONTENTS:

At the end of this 8 hours course, participants will learn:

1. To develop strategies to connect and engage students in each class
2. To build and manage digital communities
3. To employ tools to manage online activities
4. To manage cognitive overload
5. How to promote peer learning

TRAINER PROFILE

Dr. Nida Aslam Khan has been associated with IBA for more than 15 years as a faculty of department of Marketing, and she is an alumna as well. She is an enthusiastic educationist, perceptive facilitator and trainer, and solution-oriented researcher. She brings in immense experience and wisdom with her dealings with students, whether physical or virtual, as she has worked as the IBA Student Counselor and carved a new era for students' activities during her tenure.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

This course is designed for primary and secondary teachers, including school heads and will facilitate them to connect and engage with their students whether they are in synchronous and or asynchronous environment.
